

Keys to Advancing your Student Work-Readiness Program

Ensuring students have the skills needed for employment is a complex challenge for higher education institutions. To better equip your institution, consider the following:

1

Conduct an Internal Audit

Gain a deep understanding of your institution's current career-related capabilities, identifying areas of strength and areas needing improvement.

2

Fill Support Gaps

After pinpointing the areas in which student support could be developed further, determine if your internal resources can effectively close the gap.

3

Pool Outside Resources

Partnering with an outside organization can help your institution bridge the divide between a student's skills, training, and future opportunities.
